TV CANDIDS Terrence O'Flaherty

BANGKOK-The magic city of Bangkok seems to float on water. Its charms are as colorful and fragile as the multi-colored Thailand silks which shimmer and flash everywhere in the bright, hot sunlight.

Surely there are no people on earth more gentle, more luscious and more loving than the Thais. Their smiles are gloriously innocent and they are smiling most of the time

Bangkok seems to be an ideal terrain for television. Tropical growth covers the flat river land with a lush pile of green, broken occasionally by palm trees or the steep saddle roofs of the temples with their glazed orange tile roofs. It is a picture of peace and plenty and it has had television for ten years. There are 300,000 television sets in a city of several million people.

One of Bangkok's two television stations is owned by the Army, the other by the government. I was the guest of Taveesak Senanarong, the art director and scenic designer of Channel 7, which is Army-owned.

The studio is run with a jovial kind of informality. A live show was in progress last night honoring the work of the United Nations. A small Thai boy, as brown as a berry and grinning from ear to ear, had sneaked into the studio and squatted on top of a pile of cables almost directly under one of the

When the camera was swung around suddenly the boy was sent rolling across the floor. The cameraman left his camera and picked up the lad, replaced him on the cables and went back to his job. The U. N. didn't suffer a bit.

A large sign on the studio wall reads: "DO NOT PLAY ROCK 'N ROLL, TWIST, LIMBO, MASHED POTATO OR THE BOSSANOVA."

The Thai army considers them ungraceful and indecent. And compared to the classical dance dramas of Thailand, they are indeed.

American movies and television films do not come from Hollywood translated or "dubbed" into the Thai language. Instead the television station receives a script along with the film. Several local actors sit around a microphone in a small studio. Beside them is a television set which shows the picture being transmitted. All regular sound effects are allowed to remain in the show, but when an American actor speaks, the volume is turned down and one of the Thai actors reads his lines translated into his native tongue. No attempt is made to match the lip movements.

Swift conversation and fast moving dramatic scenes are handled with amazing skill by the local actors who get approximately $10 for each show, which is high in relation to other TV jobs.

After watching Thailand television for over a week it will be difficult to complain about the length of commercials on American TV. In a quarter hour between the U. N. show and a Thailand version of an American movie, I counted 16 commercials in a row. The rules allow 12 minutes of commercial time in each 30 minute show. It is almost always used.

Here, the children are urged to drink milk in stead of beer and coke. And the electric razor commercials shave a horse's mane instead of the fuzz on a peach, but otherwise most everything is the same.

Even the models for shampoos, soaps, tissues and cosmetics are mostly the same frigid and narcissistic American blondes who clutter the U.S. TV screen. Compared to the lovely, nut-brown Thais, our familiar female hucksters seem pale and unhealthy indeed.

When a bachelor begins to feel this way, it's as good a time as any to start heading home.

Dear Sir: We are two young ladies with an avid interest in singing. We would like to seek some advice from Clara Ray (Dick Chamberlain's singing girl friend) and Carolyn Tro-janowski, Clara's vocal instruc-tor. When you print your reply in your column, including the The screenplay I am writing is addresses, would you please an unusually faithful adaptation of Jonathan Kozol's novel wish (and we think you do too!) about a young Harvard boy and to keep it as private as pos-a Radcliffe girl who run away sible so that they will not be from school and live together bothered unnecessarily. Our suggestions for the false names are (for Clara) Carol Robbins and (for Carolyn) Cathy Taylor. Please also refrain from

Dear Girls: I'm using just your initials, as requested: What you really want, I strongly suspect, is to get Dick's address through Clara or Carolyn. I say that because I think I know most of the tricks used by fans for that purpose. But yours is the slickest yet. If I'm right, you can reach Dick (and yours is the silekest yet. If I'm right, you can reach Dick (and Clara and Carolyn too!) by writing to the "Dr. Kildare" Company, M-G-M Studio, Cul-ver City, Calif. If I'm wrong, I'm sorry.
